Selma

Selma is a good movie because it depicts an important part of African American history. It is a movie about Martin Luther King and his fight for equal rights, specially his march from Selma to Montgomery. The film goes into great detail from the characters to the events and really is a good representation of what MLK went through with his fight for equality.

The Hate U Give

The Hate You Give a good movie because it represents what teens and black people as a whole have to go through every day. The movie features themes of police brutality and Black Lives Matter. It is something that many people can relate to today.
